

Nikolaos Katopodis

Born on the Greek island of Lefkada, Niko Katopodis has been in the wholesale/retail business since high school. He moved to New York City when he was 17 to go to Queens College, where he studied Economics. While in college, he started working with his brother-in-law, John Zoitias, at a supermarket called Westside Market on the Upper West Side of Manhattan where he cut his teeth in the industry and began to look for a location where he could bring his vision to life. He embarked on his award-winning entrepreneurial journey in 2003, opening his own store in Port Washington, North Shore Farms, aiming to bring together the best of a farmer's market, grocery store, and specialty shop in one warm and personal shopping experience. Now with 9 popular locations across Long Island, Queens, and Westchester, North Shore Farms offers a unique shopping experience that draws loyal customers from across the region and holds up against the competition. Together with Zoitias' markets, Niko has been involved in over 20 locations across 5 counties of New York, is widely regarded as an expert on NYC supermarkets, and has made sure to bring Greek foods and specialties into each department of his stores. Niko is a resident of Manhasset, New York along with his wife, Marilena, and his two sons, Angelo and Stelio.
